

"Hot Look Baggy Clothes"

By Shann Nix

San Francisco Chronicle

November 16, 1992

For most of the girls, the hairstyle is long, worn down straight and twirled between the fingers, raked out of the eyes with elaborately casual gestures, or caught up in the stretchy cloth hair bands that form oddly classical chignons on top of the T-shirted, sneakered bodies.

For guys, hair follows a general pattern of a long thatch on top with shaved sides. There are some crew cuts, some ponytails, some shoulder-length hair.

Their faces are blank, unformed, with that layer of subcutaneous puppy fat that life sucks out of you quickly after you leave high school. Some have elaborately painted long red fingernails, but most sport neglected chipped nails. Ears show multiple pierce marks, many fitted with silver loops of different sizes. Shoes for both sexes are the same, tennis shoes or copies of men's lace-up shoes in black.

Girls wear bright matte lipstick -- never clear lip gloss. Eye makeup is generally restricted to black liquid eyeliner worn Cleopatra-style, on the top lid only.

Both sexes favor baggy clothes that hide rather than reveal the body -
- jeans belted in with wide black belts, white or gray T-shirts under lumberjack plaid shirts or regular men's shirts, worn unbuttoned and untucked, baggy sweaters or sweatshirts.

Copyright, Chronicle Publishing Company, Nov 16, 1992

Indexing (details)

Cite

Title

Hot Look: Baggy
Clothes: [FINAL
Edition]